offerings into areas like luxury yachts and tented lodges.

Much of the discussion focused on the Marriott Bonvoy loyalty program, which Capuano describes as a central growth engine. The company wants to shift Bonvoy from a purely transactional platform to one that offers "unique experiences" beyond hotel stays, such as the chance to attend events like the Emmys or Formula 1. It's signing partnerships with companies like Starbucks as well to make the program "stickier" and more appealing to younger and less frequent travelers.

The interview also covered Marriott's technological overhaul and recent deals with MGM Resorts and Sonder.
